Ladies with "Jupiter."

The two Hollins sistors in "Jupiter," Digby Bell's new opera, are models of English beauties of distinctly different types. Miss-Hilda Hollins, the younger of the two, is a tall, stately beauty, and plays the part of Juno, Queen of Olympus, with great dignity and a voice of excellent power and sweetness. Her sister, Maude, plays the ingenious role of the slave girl with a naviette that is very captivating. The young ladies are nieces of the musical director, Mr.
Julian Edwards, who is responsible for the beautiful music in "Jupiter."

Wiles; Dr. Charles M. Frissell and Charles B. Ott, usliers. Then came the attendants, Misses Matilda Burke and Martha Caldwell, charmingly attired in pure white gowns of Greclan pattern, followed by Dr. Robert Hazlett Cummins and Harry O. Ott, a brother of the bride, after whom came Misses Elizabeth Bailey, of Kentucky, and Martha, Ott, a sister of the bride, followed by the bride and groom. The bride, Miss Sydney Heiskell Ott, was becomingly arrayed in a handsome wedding toilet of heavy white satin, en traine, cut decollette, and carrying a bunch of bridal roses. She was much admired. The bridal party, on reaching the altar, separated on each side, the bride and groom occupying the center, where they were met by Rev. Dr. Jacob Bellville, of Pottsville, Pa., father of the groom, who performed the ceremony nessisted by Rev. Dr. W. H. Cooke, pastor of the church.
